

Philosophy and Surrogacy.

Herjeet says:
Sometimes a surrogate might change their mind, and decide they want to keep the baby.

In that case, rather than arguing about who should have the 'right' to 'keep' the baby, maybe we should think about how the surrogate and the couple can see the baby.

Some people want a baby but can't create or carry one themselves. This includes some gay couples, people with medical problems, or people who don't have a partner.

A surrogate is someone who gets pregnant for another person/couple who can't have a baby. They agree to give the baby to that person/couple when it is born.

What do you think?
